Brief overview of Camas High School

Timeline: A Brief Overview

Camas High School is a public high school that serves 2,036 students in grades 9 through 12. It is part of Camas School District 117 and has a student/teacher ratio of 19.4:1. This makes it one of the smaller schools within the district.

Its campus is located in the city of Camas, Washington. The school's building features computer labs, more than 60 classrooms, gymnasiums, wrestling and weight rooms, aerobics room, a career center, integrated science labs, a student-run credit union and student store, and an auditorium with capacity of over 600 persons.

The A Concise Overview of the Camas High School Timeline has a strong reputation for its student code of conduct and rigorous academic standards. In addition, its sports teams are well known for their high quality of play.

A large percentage of the community supports the school and the many events and activities it hosts. Moreover, its teachers are highly qualified and highly motivated to provide students with the best education possible.

In the early days, Camas High School was shaped by its relationship with the paper mill that dominated the community. The mill owners funded the schools to educate the next generation of workers in a trade that would help them earn a living and a better future for their families.

The school also benefited from the support of community organizations like the Lions and Kiwanis clubs. They collected funds for local needs, primarily youth activities. In 1946, these groups became a joint organization, and Camas-Washougal Community Chest was born. Visit <https://mistergweb.com/> for more information.

Construction of the school building

When construction is complete, Camas Ridge will have a brand new school building for the students in its neighborhood. This new building will be designed for safety and security, efficiency and sustainability, and modern teaching and learning.

While the construction is underway, Camas Ridge students and staff have relocated to a temporary school site on the Willard property at 29th and Lincoln. They will stay there until the new school building opens in 2024.

This will give them a place to study and do other things during the construction. It will also allow them to take some of their beloved items with them to their new home, such as art murals or the pink bench that honors Mouhammadou Faye, a student who died in 2018.

DLR Group was asked by Camas School District to design a school for high school students that would reflect a modern approach to learning. The district's community had input throughout the design process.

The new school features a project-based learning curriculum for students in 9th through 12th grade, a continuation of the program from the project-based learning middle school. This curriculum focuses on collaborative, integrated learning teams.

In addition, the new school reflects the district's commitment to energy conservation and sustainable building practices. The building's orientation along an East-West axis minimizes sun exposure, reduces heat gain, and captures natural daylight with operable windows and continuous clerestory.

First year of student enrollment

Located in Camas, Washington, Camas High School provides various educational opportunities to students from grades nine through 12. The school is governed by the Camas School District.

CHS provides several different types of academic opportunities including: American English, science, math, art, vocational education, social sciences and physical education. Students can also choose to take at-level courses or advanced placement courses in a variety of subjects.

In addition to academics, CHS supports athletics. It competes in the Greater St. Helens League of WIAA District IV and provides multiple sports, including wrestling, boys' and girls' volleyball, football, baseball, cross country, softball, golf and tennis.

Students are able to take classes in the arts, as well, such as music and art. Additionally, the school offers courses in the fields of business, computer sciences and engineering.

This chart shows the percent of all people 25 years of age or older who have either graduated from high school or completed the Graduate Equivalency Degree (GED) or some equivalent certification/credential.

School facilities and resources in the early days

In the early days of Camas High School, there were several facilities and resources that supported education. These included the school's original building, known as the Garver Theater.

The Garver Theater would eventually become the home of the school's fine arts programs. It is a treasured landmark in our community.

Throughout the early days of Camas High School, teachers worked hard to help their students. They taught children in the best way they could, using their intuition, and ensuring every child learned what they needed to learn.

One of the most important things they did was support student success by providing extracurricular activities and helping them reach their academic potential. This is where their commitment to the Camas School District truly shined!

Another big part of that commitment was their care for students who were in foster care. They partnered with the local Department of Children, Youth and Families (DCYF) to provide innovative services that reduced educational disruptions and strengthened school stability for our foster care students.

These efforts, along with the work of the school's social workers and counselors, helped ensure students were well-cared for in their time in foster care. Many students were able to return to school and earn their diplomas.

These programs are just a small part of the support Camas High School offers to families. The school also offers essential needs and housing stability support, as well as other programs that promote student success and provide an additional layer of safety for students and their families.

Conclusion

Camas High School is a public high school located in the state of Washington. The school is a member of the Camas School District and serves grades 9-12. It is home to over 2,200 students and offers an array of facilities and resources including sports, arts, and fine arts.

It also boasts a state-of-the-art campus designed for safety and security, efficiency and sustainability, and modern teaching and learning. This new edifice was the centerpiece of a 2018 bond measure and will serve students for generations to come.

The design of the school has been a multi-year process that includes multiple community open houses and a feedback form — not to mention the actual construction of the building itself, which will begin in 2022. The aforementioned coronavirus has stymied some of the more ambitious plans to have the building open in time for the start of the 2023-2024 school year, but the project is moving along and it is a proud moment to see this building in the works.

The aforementioned coronavirus also has prompted the CSD to adopt some of the most cutting-edge technology in the classroom, such as augmented reality, virtual reality, and holograms, among others. These tools are not only helping teachers deliver better learning experiences, they also improve student engagement and enhance the overall experience of attending a public high school.
